

RYE & BATTLE OBSERVER

25.4.08.

Trainee sparks happy to put in charity stint

TRAINEE electricians from a Battle-based training company have helped put a spark into a Hampshire charity.

New Career Skills (NCS), the nationwide plumbing, electrical, domestic and commercial energy assessor training provider, were only too happy to help The Rose Road Association which helps young people with disabilities.

Electrician trainees and three tutors took time out of their weekend to help the charity with electrical work at their Bradbury Centre.

The team worked through the weekend installing new light circuits, consumer units and hand driers, as well as carrying out inspections and testing work to ensure compliance.

Trevor Dormedy, NCS managing director, based at the company's Battle HQ, said: "We are deeply impressed by the work of Rose Road and proud to have adopted them as our charity to work with on an on-going basis to help them with their plumbing and electrical requirements.

"Not only will we gain enormous pleasure in seeing the money we are saving them benefit each of their pupils, but also working on 'real life' projects is a great opportunity for our students."

Heather Aspinall, chief executive of Rose Road, expressed the charity's gratitude.

She said: "Having NCS support in looking after our ongoing electrical and plumbing work is an enormous help with the Change My Life Appeal, and shows the variety of ways in which companies can get involved and make a difference. We know with NCS on board the work is in safe hands".

For more information on New Career Skills courses, visit www.newcareerskills.co.uk for a free information pack.

For more information on Rose Road, or how you can get involved, call the charity's Bradbury Centre on 02380 8072 1234 or e-mail fundraising@roseroad.org.uk